YIELDS:	PREP TIME:	TOTAL TIME:
25	15 mins	3 hrs 15 mins

1. In a large bowl using a hand mixer, beat butter, brown sugar, and molasses until fluffy, about 2 minutes. Add egg and vanilla and beat until combined.
2. In a medium bowl, whisk flour, spices, baking soda, and salt until combined. With the mixer on low, gradually add dry ingredients to wet ingredients, as well as fresh ginger, orange zest, and black pepper (if using), until dough just comes together. (Do not overmix!)
3. Divide dough in half and create two discs. Wrap each in plastic wrap and chill until firm, about 2 to 3 hours. (Alternatively, divide dough in half and roll each piece of dough between two pieces of parchment to 1/4" thick. Chill until firm.)
4. Preheat oven to 350° and line two large baking sheets with parchment paper. Place one disc of dough on a lightly floured surface and roll until 1/4" thick. (Alternatively, peel off both sheets of parchment from dough, then replace one sheet of parchment back underneath dough.) Cut out gingerbread men with a 3" wide cutter and transfer to baking sheets.
5. Bake until slightly puffed and set, 9 to 10 minutes, depending on the size of your cookie cutters. Let cool on baking sheets for 5 minutes before transferring to a cooling rack to cool completely.
6. Repeat with remaining disc of dough. Decorate with icing and sprinkles as desired.

Box Tree Moth

Months ago, I did a Lunch and Learn on Boxwood. I did not mention a pest called the box tree moth because it is not a problem here in Michigan. Unfortunately, 2 cases have been found in our state. This almost brings me to tears, as I have over 400 boxwood and feel they give my garden a little magic that it would not have without them.

The following is a piece from the Detroit Free Press, I think it is important for all our members to read and be aware. Let's be part of the solution!

Invasive box tree moth species found in Michigan

Detroit Free Press

Boxwood bushes are all the rage this year, with homeowners across metro Detroit planting them along walkways and property lines.

But there's a new insect pest that's threatening to suck the life out of the normally hardy plants. The U.S. Department of Agriculture's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service confirmed Monday in a news release that the invasive box tree moth has turned up at two homes in the city of Clinton in Lenawee County. The bugs can result in defoliation and death of ornamental boxwoods.

What is a box tree moth?

The moth's larvae look like a green and yellow caterpillar with white, yellow, and black stripes plus black spots. The box tree moth only feeds on boxwoods, which makes them easy to spot. Adult box tree moths have two color forms, the most common form has white wings with dark brown borders. While the dark form has solid brown wings with a white streak or spot on each forewing. Both forms have a distinctive white mark dot in the middle of each forewing.

When larvae are young and hiding among twigs and leaves, it may be difficult to recognize an infestation.

Why is it here?

The Michigan Department of Agriculture and Rural Development said that in May 2021, there possibly were infested boxwood plants shipped to retail locations in multiple states, including Michigan.

The pest was discovered in three of six Michigan facilities. At the moment, it's unknown if the box tree moth populations found in Clinton are linked or if the pest entered the state another way.

Why it's harmful

During the beginning of an infestation due to the young larvae hiding among twigs and leaves, it may be difficult to recognize the moth.

Frequent signs of infestation include chewed, cut, or missing leaves, yellowing or brown leaves, white webbing and green-black excrement on or around the plant. The larvae typically skeletonize the leaves and feed on the back causing defoliation plus dryness which actually leads to the plant's death.

DNR specialists express the seriousness of this infestation.

"Box tree moth poses a serious threat to our boxwood industry," said Mike Philip, Pesticide and Plant Pest Management Division Director with the Michigan Department of Agriculture and Rural Development in a written response. "We are in the assessment stage of this response, and we are asking Michiganders to look closely at their boxwood plants and report any signs of this pest so we can determine the scope of this infestation and work to reduce the spread."

What to do

The DNR is releasing a survey to help combat the spread.

"MDARD is developing a survey plan to further determine the extent of the infestation," added Philip in a written response. "But Michiganders can be a tremendous help by being on the lookout for box tree moth and reporting it." They provided a list of prevention tips for homeowners:

1. Check boxwood plants for signs of the box tree moth.
2. If one sees signs of the box tree moth it's recommended to take a picture and report it online.
3. Allow state and federal agricultural officials to inspect your boxwood plants for the signs.
4. Residents may be directed to remove infested branches if a new population is confirmed. For heavy infestations, it's recommended that residents cut the boxwood from its base. Then discard all boxwood debris by double bagging it in plastic and putting it with household trash.

For information on the species including photos, the DNR recommends checking their website.

Have you wondered why you can't find Barley in any store?

2021 was an undeniably bad year for much of North America's barley crop. Heat and drought dealt an uncommonly poor hand to growers in Idaho, Montana, and North Dakota, as well as in Canada's Prairie Provinces. With both average yields and stocks much lower than they have been in years, industry experts looked anxiously to the immediate future, raising fears about pricing, quality, and availability.

Barley is mainly used in Beer Production, cattle feed not to mention some of our favorite fall recipes. Here is a suggestion for a substitute.... Farro.

So, what's the difference between barley and farro? The differences between barley and farro are minimal, with farro being slightly larger and more oblong than barley. Farro also has more protein, but otherwise, these grains can be used interchangeably in almost any recipe.
